OFQUAL'S UPDATE REGARDING EXAM GRADE AWARDING GUIDELINES

Following Ofqual's most recent update on 3rd April 2020, we asked students if they think they will be given a fair grade this summer of students said they do not think they will get a fair grade

“ It's so gross to think of all my teachers sat debating who gets ranked where in my subjects.

“ But what happens if the entirety of the group of students who have a grade are towards the top of the boundary? Will the lowest automatically be put down even though they are better than people in other schools?

“ I am home-schooled and a private candidate at my centre, what am I supposed to do now? Still no clear answer.

“ Well.... To be honest I don't really know how to feel. I'm just worried about getting a low grade as I didn't really try during my mocks. I know, my fault, but I mean come on- what's the percentage of students who actually give a damn about mocks? Probably something like 30%.

“ What if you go to a very high performing school? Does this work against those ranked lowest? Will those at the bottom of the rankings be given grades according to statistical data from their schools?

NON-ESSENTIAL UNIVERSITY EXAMS

We asked students if they think that non-essential university exams should be cancelled

51% voted yes (for all students)

34% votes yes (for non-final year students)

“ My department at my university has cancelled all of the exams, which I think is a good idea because I am seriously struggling with how you would be able to do STEM exams online without there being mass cheating or making the exams ridiculous etc.... They have said that there will be some sort of 'assessment point' next year or something, so I wonder what that will be...

“ If I were in 2nd year I'd be gutted if exams were cancelled since it'd have the potential to impact Masters applications, but as I'm in the first year it doesn't matter too much.

“ I've still no sodding idea where I stand as an HND student, it's our final year exams, but in uni terms we count as 2nd years... We don't do mocks either so dunno how that would work. If my exam was physical, I would need to travel across the country through the 2 busiest train stations in rush hour to get to it, which seems kind of against current advice
